Passage One

Have you ever felt your life go into slow motion as you realize something bad is happening? Now scientists have measured exactly how much these attention-grabbing events slow down our perception of the world around us.

An example of the world appearing to slow down is when you are hanging on the phone waiting for someone to pick up at the other end. If your attention wanders while you're waiting, then suddenly switches back, you will probably hear what seems like a longer than usual silence before hearing the dialing tone again.

获取更多【同等学力】课程资料添加微信：xuexi-1688（考试学院） 学习省心省力 ！

To see how our perception of time changes when something new happens, Vincent Walsh and his colleagues put headphones on volunteers and played eight beeps to their right ears. The gap between each beep was exactly 1 second, except for the gap between the fourth and fifth beeps, which the scientists could make shorter or longer. They altered the length of this gap until the volunteers estimated it was the same length as the other gaps. The researchers found that, on average, people judge a second slightly short, at 955 milliseconds.

In the second part of the experiment, the first four beeps were played to the subjects' right ear, but the other four were then played to their left. Again, the volunteers were asked to estimate when the gap between the fourth and fifth beeps was the same as the others. This time they judged a second to be even shorter at 825 milliseconds long.

Perceiving a second to be much shorter than it is makes you feel as though the world has gone into slow motion. Walsh thinks the effect could have evolved to give us a fraction more time to react to potentially threatening events.

21. After you noticed a car hurtling towards you, you might feel that _____.

A. the world around you had slowed down

B. something bad was going to happen

C. life had suddenly become meaningless

D. people's life was so fragile

22. According to the passage, hanging on the phone waiting for someone to pick up at the other end, you might _____.

A. have a high concentration of mind

B. feel very annoyed at the people on the other end

C. be unable to hear the dialing tone

D. feel time is somehow slowed down

23. Vincent Walsh and his colleagues did the experiment in order to _____.

A. observe how people's perception of time changes

B. find out the relationship between time and life

C. study how time changes at the 4th and 5th beeps

D. see which ear is more sensitive to beeps

24. What have Vincent and his colleagues found through the experiment?

A. The left ear of people is more sensitive than the right one.

B. People judge a second to be slightly shorter than it really is.

C. Research subjects are less accurate than researchers in judging a second.

D. Normally a second is in fact either 955 milliseconds or 825 milliseconds.

25. Which is the best title for the passage?

B. Which Ear Is Better

C. How People Perceive the World Around Us at Some Moment

Passage Two

Do you know that all human beings have a "comfortable zone" regulating the distance they stand from someone when they talk? This distance varies in interesting ways among people of different cultures.

Greeks, others of the Eastern Mediterranean, and many of those from South America normally stand close together when they talk, often moving their faces even closer as they warm up in a conversation. North Americans find this awkward and often back away a few inches. Studies have found that they tend to feel most comfortable at about 21 inches apart. In much of Asia and Africa, there is even more space between two speakers in conversation. This greater space subtly lends an air of dignity and respect. This matter of space is nearly always unconscious, but it is interesting to observe.

This difference applies also to the closeness with which people sit together, the extent which they lean over one another in conversation, how they move as they argue, or make an emphatic point. In the United States, for example, people try to keep their bodies apart even in a crowded elevator; in Paris they take it as it comes!

Although North Americans have a relatively wide "comfortable zone" for talking, they communicate, a great deal with their hands—not only with gestures but also with touch. They put a sympathetic hand on a person's shoulder to demonstrate warmth of feeling or an arm around him in sympathy; they nudge a man in the ribs to emphasize a funny story; they pat an arm in reassurance or stroke a child's head in affection, they readily take someone's arm to help him across a street or direct him along an unfamiliar route. To many people—especially those from Asia or the Muslim countries—such bodily contact is unwelcome, especially if inadvertently done with the left-hand. (The left hand carries no special significance in the U. S. Many Americans are simply left-handed and use that hand more.)

26. In terms of bodily distance, North Americans _____.

A. are similar to South Americans　　B. stand farthest apart

C. feel ill at ease when too close　　D. move nearer during conversations

27. For Asians, the comfortable zone _____.

A. implies esteem　　B. measures 21 inches

C. varies according to status　　D. is deliberately determined

28. It can be inferred from the passage that in a crowded elevator, a Frenchman would _____.

A. behave in the same way as an American would

B. be afraid of bodily contact

C. make no particular effort to distance himself from the crowd

D. do his best to leave

29. When Americans tell a joke, they often _____.

A. pat people on the head　　B. give people a hug

C. dig people in the ribs　　D. touch people on the arm

30. What does the passage mainly concern?

A. It concerns hand signals.

B. It concerns body language.

C. It concerns cultural differences between the East and the West.

D. It concerns distance and bodily contact.

Passage Three

Everyone knows a stone bounces best on water if it's round and flat, and spun towards the water as fast as possible. Some enthusiasts even travel to international stone-skimming competitions, like world champion Jerdone Coleman-McGhee, who made a stone bounce 38 times on Blanco River, Texas, in 1992.

Intuitively, a flat stone works best because a relatively large part of its surface strikes the water, so there's more bounce. Inspired by his eight-year-old son, physicist Lyderic Bocquet wanted to find out more. He tinkered with some simple equations describing a stone bouncing on water in terms of its radius, speed and spin, and taking account of gravity and the water's drag.

The equations showed that the faster a spinning stone is travelling, the more times it will bounce. To bounce at least once without sinking, Bocquet found the stone needs to be travelling at a minimum speed of about 1 kilometre per hour.

The equations also backed his hunch (直觉) that spin is important because it keeps the stone fairly flat from one bounce to the next. The spin has a gyroscopic (陀螺的) effect, preventing the stone from tipping and falling sideways into the water.

To match the world record of 38 bounces using a 10-centimetre-wide stone, Bocquet predicts it would have to be travelling at about 40 kilometres per hour and spinning at 14 revolutions a second. He adds that drilling lots of small pits in the stone would probably help, by reducing water drag in the same way that dim pies on a golf ball reduce air drag.

31. Which of the following could be the best title for this passage?

A. Stone-skimming Is a Sacred Thing

B. International Stone-skimming Competitions

C. How to Make Stone-skimming More Enjoyable

D. The Mathematical Formula for Stone-skimming

32. In order to make a stone bounce best on water, one needs to _____.

A. find a big, round stone

B. make the stone spin as fast as possible

C. reduce the spin of the stone

D. do some complicated mathematical equations

33. According to Lyderic Bocquet, which of the following is NOT mentioned as a factor influencing the bounces of a stone on water?

A. The clearness of the water.

B. The gravity of the Earth.

C. The shape of the stone.

D. The speed and spin.

34. Which of the following is not the reason why Lyderic Bocquet supposed that spin is important?

A. Because it keeps the stone fairly flat from one bounce to the next.

B. Because the spin can create a gyroscopic effect.

C. Because the gyroscope can prevent the stone from tipping and falling sideways into the water.

D. Because the spin can reduce the water drag.

35. Lyderic Bocquet drilled lots of small pits in the stone in order to _____.

A. make it look smarter　　B. reduce the water drag

C. increase the revolution of the stone　　D. make the game more like golf

Passage Four

It's a typical Snoopy card: cheerful message, bright colors, though a little yellow and faded now. Though I've received fancier, more expensive card over the years, this is the only one I've saved. One summer, it spoke volumes to me.

I received it during the first June I faced as a widow to raise two teenage daughters alone. In all the emotional confusion of this sudden single parenthood, I was overwhelmed with, of all things, the simplest housework: leaky taps, oil changes, even barbeques (烧烤). Those had always been my husband's jobs. I was embarrassed every time I hit my thumb with a hammer or couldn't get the lawnmower (割草机) started.

My uncertain attempts only fueled the fear inside me: How could I be both a father and mother to my girls? Clearly, I lacked the tools and skills.

On this particular morning, my girls pushed me into the living room to see something. (I prayed it wasn't another repair job.) The "something" turned out to be an envelope and several wrapped bundles on the carpet. My puzzlement must have been plain as I gazed from the colorful packages to my daughters' bright faces.

"Go ahead! Open them!" They urged. As I unwrapped the packages, I discovered a small barbecue grill (烧烤架) and all the necessary objects including a green kitchen glove with a frog pattern on it.

"But why?" I asked.

"Happy Father's Day!" they shouted together.

"Moms don't get presents on Father's Day." I protested.

"You forgot to open the card." Jane reminded. I pulled it from the envelope. There sat Snoopy, on top of his dog house, merrily wishing me a Happy Father's Day. "Because," the girls said, "you've been a father and mother to us. Why shouldn't you be remembered on Father's Day?"

As I fought back tears, I realized they were right, I wanted to be a "professional" dad, who had the latest tools and knew all the tricks of the trade. The girls only wanted a parent they could count on to be there, day after day, performing repeatedly the maintenance tasks of basic care and love.

The girls are grown now, and they still send me Father's Day cards, but none of those cards means as much to me as that first one. Its simple message told me being a great parent didn't require any special tools at all—just a willing worker.

36. By "it spoke volumes to me," (Para. 1) the mother in the story means the card _____.

A. conveyed significant meanings to her

37. After her husband's death, the mother found it was the hardest to _____.

A. handle the emotional shock

B. face the terrible loneliness

C. keep harmony of the family

D. fulfill a male role in the house

38. What puzzled the mother when her daughter asked her to see something one morning?

A. It was not another repair job this time.

B. She got gifts at that time of the year.

C. Both of her daughters looked excited.

D. The bundles on the floor were wrapped.

39. The girls gave their mother a barbecue set probably because _____.

A. it was a proper Father's Day gift

B. it was what their mother wanted

C. barbecue was their favorite food

D. they wanted their mother to barbecue

40. Which of the following statements is true about the first Father's Day card?

A. It made the mother eager to get the latest tools.

B. It praised the mother as a professional dad.

C. Its fancy design impressed the mother most.

► Section B

Directions: In this section, you are required to read five short paragraphs and decide which of the five titles marked A, B, C, D and E is the best suited to each of them. Choose the best answer and mark your answer on the Answer Sheet.

A. Land of the kiwi.

B. Reasons for concern.

C. The introduction of predators.

D. Explanation for larger bird populations.

E. Preventing the kiwi decline.

Kiwis are flightless birds endemic to New Zealand, and by far the smallest living ratites and lay the largest egg in relation to their body size of any species of bird in the world.

41

The kiwi is synonymous with New Zealand, so much so that Australians endearingly refer to New Zealanders as "kiwi" —people from the Land of the Kiwi. This unique bird, recognizable by its short squat body and elongated beak, is under threat. Its small, clawlike wings render the kiwi flightless; it must of necessity live on the ground. The kiwi is thus easy prey to marauding enemies such as humans and mammals.

42

When the great land mass of the south split 75 million years ago, the kiwi and many other ground-living bird species became separated from predatory mammals within what was later to become know as New Zealand. The birds were able to multiply and flourish because there were very few mammals land-locked within the islands. Kiwis have evolved certain mammalian characteristics over time, living on the ground and free as they were from attack by mammals.

43

However, when the Polynesians arrived about 1,000 years ago bringing with them dogs and rats, the kiwi population and other vulnerable bird species soon suffered a severe reduction in numbers. The coming of the Europeans in the eighteenth century brought even more determined predators, including the cat and, especially, the stoat—a kind of weasel introduced to control rabbits. The stoat is a very vicious and efficient killer of kiwis.

44

There are six types of kiwis, and all six are threatened. Two are "critically endangered" because they have populations of less than 250 mature birds. Two are "endangered" meaning that it is estimated that within three generations their numbers will have declined by 50%. The other two are designated "vulnerable" —one because its habitat is shrinking, the other because it is potentially under threat from stoats and other mammals.

45

100 years ago there were more than 5 million North Island Brown Kiwis. Today, there are probably around 30,000 and the population is decreasing at a rate of 6% a year. Only the Little Spotted Kiwi is increasing because of successful attempts to transfer the creature to predator-free offshore islands. There are further reasons for hope. Trapping predators and rearing baby chicks for later release into the wild can have a dramatic effect on kiwi numbers; but it will be necessary to do so on a large scale.

It would be tragic if New Zealand were to lose its national symbol, the kiwi. Surely the strangest bird in existence, unable to fly, it sniffs out its food with a remarkably strong sense of smell. Its legs are powerful and muscular, for the kiwi is a burrower living in dens—some species even preferring tunnels, yet another similarity it shares with some mammals. But it cannot share its habitat with them without eventually losing the battle for survival.

The old lady had always been proud of the great rose-tree in her garden, and was fond of telling how it had grown from a cutting she had brought years before from Italy, when she was first married. She and her husband had been travelling back in their carriage from Rome (it was before the time of railways) and on a bad piece of road south of Siena they had broken down, and had been forced to pass the night in a little house by the road-side. The accommodation was wretched of course; she had spent a sleepless night, and rising early had stood, wrapped up, at her window, with the cool air blowing on her face, to watch the dawn. She could still, after all these years, remember the blue mountains with the bright moon above them, and how a far-off town on one of the peaks had gradually grown whiter and whiter, till the moon faded, the mountains were touched with the pink of the rising sun, and suddenly the town was lit as by an illumination, one window after another catching and reflecting the sun's beam, till at last the whole little city twinkled and sparkled up in the sky like a nest of stars.
