Part Ⅲ Reading Comprehension (25 points)

▶ Section A

Directions: In this section there are four passages followed by questions or unfinished statements, each with four suggested answers A, B, C and D. Choose the best answer and mark your answer on the Answer Sheet.

Passage One

Much unfriendly feeling towards computers has been based on the fear of widespread unemployment resulting from their introduction. Computers are often used as part of automated (自动化) production systems requiring a least possible number of operators, causing the loss of many jobs. This has happened, for example, in many steelworks.

On the other hand, computers do create jobs. They are more skilled and better paid, though fewer in number than those they replace. Many activities could not continue in their present form without computers, no matter how many people are employed. Examples are the check clearing (交换) system of major banks and the weather forecasting system.

When a firm introduces computers, a few people are usually employed in key posts (such as jobs of operations managers) while other staff are re-trained as operators, programmers, and data preparation staff. After the new system has settled down, people in non-computer jobs are not always replaced when they leave, resulting in a decrease in the number of employees. This decrease is sometimes balanced by a substantial increase in the activity of the firm, resulting from the introduction of computers.

The attitudes of workers towards computers vary. There is fear of widespread unemployment and of the takeover of many jobs by computer-trained workers, making promotion for older workers not skilled in computers more difficult.

On the other hand, many workers regard the trend toward wider use of computers inevitable. They realize that computers bring about greater efficiency and productivity, which will improve the condition of the whole economy, and lead to the creation of more jobs. This view was supported by the former British Prime Minister, James Callaghan in 1979, when he made the point that new technologies hold the key to increased productivity, which will benefit the economy in the long run.

21. The unfriendly feeling towards computers is developed from _____.

A. the possible widespread unemployment caused by their introduction

B. their use as part of automated production systems

C. the least possible number of operators

D. the production system in steelworks

22. The underlined word"They" (Line 1, Par. 2) refers to _____.

A. computers B. jobs C. activities D. systems

23. According to Paragraph 2, without computers _____.

A. human activities could not continue

B. there could not be weather forecasting systems

C. many activities would have to change their present form

D. banks would not be able to go on with check clearing

24. According to the passage, what results from the introduction of computers?

A. After re-training, all employees in the firm get new jobs.

B. A considerable proportion of people are employed in key posts.

C. The firm keeps all of its original staff members.

D. The decrease in staff members may be balanced by the increase of firm activities.

25. James Callaghan's attitude towards computers can be best described as _____.

A. doubtful B. regretful C. unfriendly D. supportive

Passage Two

At the Kyoto conference on global warming in December 1997, it became abundantly clear how complex it has become to work out international agreements relating to the environment because of economic concerns unique to each country. It is no longer enough to try to forbid certain activities or to reduce emissions of certain substances. The global challenges of the interlink between the environment and development increasing bring us to the core of the economic life of states. During the late 1980s we were able, through international agreements, to make deep cuts in emissions harmful to the ozone layer. These reductions were made possible because substitutions had been found for many of the harmful chemicals and, more important, because the harmful substances could be replaced without negative effects on employment and the economies of states.

Although the threat of global warming has been known to the world for decades and all countries and leaders agree that we need to deal with the problem, we also know that the effects of measures, especially harsh measures taken in some countries, would be nullified(抵消) if other countries do not control their emissions. Whereas the UN team on climate change has found that the emissions of carbon dioxide would have to be cut globally by 60% to stabilize the content of CO, in the atmosphere, this path is not feasible for several reasons. Such deep cuts would cause a breakdown of the world economy. Important and populous(人口众多的) low or medium – income countries are not yet willing to undertake legal commitments about their energy uses. In addition, the state of world technology would not yet permit us to make such a big leap.

We must, however, find a solution to the threat of global warming early in the 21st century. Such a commitment would require a degree of shared vision and common responsibilities new to humanity. Success lies in the force of imaginations, in imagining what would happen if we fail to act. Although many living in cold regions would welcome the global – warming effect of a warmer summer, few would cheer the arrival of the subsequent tropical diseases, especially where there had been none.

26. The main purpose of this passage is to _____.

A. analyze the problem of global warming

B. argue against making deep cuts in emissions

C. convince people that global warming is a real threat

D. criticize some countries for refusing to cut down emissions harmful to the ozone layer

27. The reason why it is difficult to get rid of the threat of global warming is that _____.

A. not all the countries are willing to make deep cuts in emissions

B. many people welcome the global – warming effect of a warmer summer

C. the leaders of many countries are not fully aware of the gravity of the problem

D. world technology is not able to solve the problem

28. In the passage the author implies that _____.

A. the world has recently become aware of the threat of global warming

B. the problem of global warming has largely been solved

C. it is always difficult to work out international agreements to cut down emission harmful to the ozone layer

D. it is no longer easy to reach international agreements relating to the environment

29. According to the author, it is impossible at present to cut 60% of carbon dioxide emissions globally because _____.

A. some people are irresponsible

B. it would cause a collapse of the world economy

C. it is only a goal to be reached in the future

D. some people are lacking in imagination

30. What should all countries do to help solve the problem of global warming?

A. They should hold another world conference on climate change.

B. They should provide advanced technology.

C. They should replace all the harmful substances.

D. They should willingly undertake legal commitments about their energy uses.

Passage Three

Ten years ago, when environmental lawyer Kassie Siegel went in search of an animal to save the world, the polar bear wasn't at all an obvious choice. Siegel and Brendan Cummings of the Center for Biological Diversity in Joshua Tree, Calif., were looking for a species whose habitat was disappearing due to climate change, which could serve as a symbol of the dangers of global warming. Her first candidate met the scientific criteria—it lived in ice caves in Alaska's Glacier Bay, which were melting away—but unfortunately it was a spider. You can't sell a lot of T-shirts with pictures of an animal most people would happily step on.

Next, Siegel turned to the Kittlitz's murrelet, a small Arctic seabird whose nesting sites in glaciers were disappearing. In 2001, she petitioned the Department of the Interior to add it to the Endangered Species list, but Interior Secretary Gale Norton turned her down. Elkhorn and staghorn coral, which are threatened by rising water temperatures in the Caribbean, did make it onto the list, but as iconic species they fell short insofar as many people don't realize they're alive in the first place. The polar bear, by contrast, is vehemently alive and carries the undeniable charisma of a top predator. And its dependence on ice was intuitively obvious; it lives on it most of the year. But it took until 2004 for researchers to demonstrate that shrinking sea ice was a serious threat to the bears' population. On Feb. 16, 2005—the day the Kyoto Protocol to curb greenhouse gas emissions took effect, without the participation of the United States—Siegel petitioned to list polar bears as endangered. Three years later her efforts met with equivocal (不明确的) success, as Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne designated the bears as "threatened" (not endangered), a significant concession from an administration that has stood almost alone in the world in its reluctance to acknowledge the dangers of climate change. The Endangered Species Act (ESA), whose odd lists of snails and bladderworts sometimes seemed stuck in the age of Darwin, had been thrust into the mainstream of 21st-century environmental politics. Break out the T-shirts!

31. Siegel and Cummings hoped to choose an animal to _____.

A. call on people to take actions against global warming

B. make people aware of the danger of environmental damage

C. introduce to people a new concept of environmental protection

D. remind people of the importance of protecting endangered species

32. The problem with Elkhorn and staghorn corals lies in that _____.

A. they were not much-liked by many people

B. they were not well-known enough to be an icon

C. they were not added to the list of Endangered Species

D. they were not considered animals by many people

33. It can be learnt that the polar bear _____.

A. was first considered by Siegel to be the iconic animal in 1998

获取更多【同等学力】课程资料添加微信：xuexi-1688（考试学院） 学习省心省力 ！

B. was first proposed by Siegel to be the endangered species in 2004

C. was not qualified scientifically as the endangered species until 2005

D. was not officially under the government protection until 2008

34. Which of the following is chosen by Siegel as the symbolic animal?

A. The murrelet nesting in glaciers.

B. The polar bear in the North Pole.

C. The spider in Alaska's Glacier Bay.

D. Staghorn corals in the Caribbean.

35. The passage is focused on _____.

A. how the scientists tried to protect endangered species

B. the problems in and the future of endangered species protection

C. how the symbolic endangered species has been chosen

D. the relation between global warming and endangered species

Passage Four

Electronic mail has been in widespread use for more than a decade, simplifying the flow of ideas, connecting people from distant offices and eliminating the need for meetings, but e-mail should be carefully managed to avoid unclear and inappropriate communication. As time goes on and more people surf the Net, the amount of unsolicited e-mail grows. Some folks reasonably assume that cyberspace mirrors many aspects of other forms of communications. It would seem that since telemarketing and direct mail are successfully used as marketing techniques for many businesses, it should follow that direct e-mail or unsolicited e-mail should also work. This topic is hotly debated between experienced Internet users and newcomers.

Unlike receiving promotional materials through the mail or over the phone, e-mail does carry a cost to the recipient. "Bandwidth" is used every time when an e-mail message is sent and places a load on existing resources. The process of sending unsolicited e-mail to large, untargeted lists, or through mailing list discussion groups or Usenet newsgroups, is known as "spamming". Spamming wastes bandwidth. Imagine if it became common practice for businesses to market this way. Not only would it be annoying for many, the load on the system would translate to higher access fees. Unlike regular mail where the sender pays the cost of delivering the mail, e-mail is cheap to send, and in some cases, expensive to receive.

Many businesses responsibly market by e-mail, for example, by inviting existing customers or website visitors to receive future e-mail announcements. Some of the free e-mail services are advertiser-supported and hence using e-mail marketing in an upfront acceptable manner. Hopefully, this will bethe norm, rendering the inconvenience of spam a thing of the past.

36. Though e-mail marketing will inevitably get more sophisticated, the author believes _____.

A. the trend will not continue for much longer

B. it is time for senders to be more responsible with it

C. it will get worse

D. it is time to put a stop to it

37. The general use of the term "spamming" in this text refers to _____.

A. any unwanted e-mail

B. any untargeted e-mail

C. any unsolicited e-mail

D. any targeted e-mail

38. The difference between regular mail and e-mail in terms of costs is _____.

A. e-mail is many times more expensive

B. e-mail costs nothing to send

C. e-mail costs the receiver

D. e-mail saves the cost of paper

39. In order to market responsibly, the author suggests that business _____.

A. obtain permission first

B. cut down on the number of e-mails

C. only send e-mail to existing customers

D. do not use advertisements through e-mail

40. Which of the following can best sum up the text?

A. The trend towards e-mail marketing must be stopped.

B. E-mail marketing messages must be managed wisely.

C. E-mail marketing has changed a lot since it first began a decade ago.

D. E-mail marketing is unproductive when used incorrectly.

Researchers have found that short, intense exercise sessions prove to be healthier than longer, more moderate sessions with an equal caloric burn.

The study found that activities like running and jumping reduced participants' risk of developing metabolic syndrome (代谢综合征) by two-thirds, compared with moderate activities like walking and leisurely bike rides that burned an equal number of calories.

Metabolic syndrome is a set of health conditions that significantly increase your risk of heart disease and type 2 diabetes (糖尿病). Insulin (胰岛素) resistance and extra weight around the middle—that dreaded "belly fat" —are two major health conditions associated with the syndrome.

The researchers used data collected from 1,841 American adults. It is suggested that vigorous physical activity should be emphasized in public health guidelines for exercise.

Currently, the non-profit organization Society for Exercise Physiology recommends 150 minutes of moderate to vigorous physical activity per week for adults aged 18-64.

Avoiding metabolic syndrome isn't the only reason to change your exercise routine. One study found that gym goers who totaled 150 minutes of vigorous activity a week looked about 10 years younger than those who skip the gym altogether, while another study found that physical activity can cut the risk of breast cancer by up to 30 percent in older women at a healthy body weight.

Also in recent years, studies have determined that three minutes of intense exercise, three times a week, could be the equivalent to five one-hour sessions, reducing the risk of heart disease and diabetes.

Comment 1:

Exercising is very personal. Nobody can say which one suits you except yourself. I have been walking for 45-50 minutes every day for the past 10 years, and it's fine with me now. I think walking is the best way to keep me healthy.

Comment 2:

Exercise is just like anything. Don't overdo it but also don't just use it as an excuse to say you are working out. It needs to be in a good range to give you a good sweat but don't destroy yourself as well. The bottom line is to get out and exercise. It might not make you live longer but it definitely will make you healthier.

Comment 3:

Any exercise is good, short or long, fast or slow, especially the exercise in the fresh air.

Comment 4:

I've always done 15-20 minutes but I don't take breaks. I move from one machine to the next, after my first round, I grab some water and then do a second round and then I'm finished.

41. The main idea of the passage is that _____.

A. shorter and more vigorous exercise can do better to health

B. metabolic syndrome can increase health disorders

C. short and intense exercise can avoid metabolic syndrome

D. intense exercise can reduce the risk of heart disease and diabetes

42. According to the passage, metabolic syndrome _____.

A. is resulted from insulin resistance and the dreaded "belly fat"

B. can be cured by short and vigorous exercise

C. can increase the risk of heart disease and diabetes

D. is a kind of deadly disease

43. According to the passage, vigorous exercises can also _____.

A. make people look younger　　B. help people lose weight

C. help people save time　　D. be more interesting

44. The writer of Comment 2 believes that _____.

A. the advice of the passage is not suitable for him

B. too much exercise can destroy people's health

C. different people should do exercise differently

D. people should exercise in an appropriate time and intensity

45. Which writer of the following comments does the same as advised in the passage?

A. The writer of Comment 1.　　B. The writer of Comment 2.

C. The writer of Comment 3.　　D. The writer of Comment 4.

C. That is to ____58____

Throughout the ages, there is no one but wishes to get somewhere. However, only a few can climb to the top and be admired by the world. What may surprise us is that most of the successful people do not make successes by doing great things, ____59____.

Just as the saying goes, "If you cannot do great things, do small things in a great way." ____60____, one does not necessarily become a great man, but he can still be successful and win respect from others by doing common jobs in a perfect way. Actually, history abounds with examples to prove this saying. The late CEO of the Apple Corporation, Steve Jobs, was a case of point. He was so addicted to details that he could not stop pushing his staff to pursue perfection in design and production. ____61____ that Apple makes great success in the mobile field, producing products that are not only innovative, but also superior.

What's your earliest childhood memory? Can you ____65____? Or talk? The first time you heard thunder or watched a television program? Adults seldom recall events much earlier than the year or so before entering school, just as children younger than three or four rarely retain any specific, personal experiences.

A variety of explanations have been proposed by psychologists for this "childhood amnesia" (儿童失忆症). One argues that the hippocampus, the region of the brain which is responsible for forming memories, ____66____. But the most popular theory maintains that, since adults do not think like children, they cannot reflect childhood memories. Adults think in words, and their life memories are like stories or narratives—one event follows another as in a novel or film. But ____67____ for early childhood memo-

C. Your humor must be relevant ____70____

D. it'll ____71____ for you to make a passing remark

If you intend using humor in your talk to make people smile, you must know how to identify shared experiences and problems. ____72____ and should help to show them that you are one of them or that you understand their situation and are in sympathy with their point of view. Depending on whom you are addressing, the problems will be different. If you are talking to a group of managers, you may refer to the disorganized methods of their secretaries; alternatively if you are addressing secretaries, ____73____.

Here is an example, which I heard at a nurses' convention, of a story which works well because the audience all shared the same view of doctors. A man arrives in heaven and is being shown around by St. Peter. ____74____. Everyone is very peaceful, polite and friendly until, waiting in a line for lunch, the new arrival is suddenly pushed aside by a man in a white coat, who rushes to the head of the line, grabs his food and stamps over to a table by himself. "Who is that?" the new arrival asked St. Peter. "Oh, that's God," came the reply, "but sometimes he thinks he's a doctor."

If you are part of the group which you are addressing, you will be in a position to know the experiences and problems which are common to all of you and ____75____ about the inedible canteen food or the chairman's notorious bad taste in ties. With other audiences you mustn't attempt to cut in with humor as they will resent an outsider making disparaging remarks about their canteen or their chairman. You will be on safer ground if you stick to scapegoats like the post office or the telephone system.

Undoubtedly, advanced technology has brought much convenience to us, but modern people, especially students, are not supposed to hinge upon the technology all the time. There are two reasons to support the view. To start with, students shoulder the responsibility of learning. There is a "study" in the word of "student". Furthermore, the future progress of technology depends upon students. How can they advance the current scientific frontier without a total understanding of the basic knowledge? Of course, students are also supposed to learn by themselves with the help of technology, especially the Internet, for collecting information is an essential ability of modern people.
